These are the five counties of the Northern Neck. We have given their principal products.
The climate and soil are adapted to a variety of other crops. No portion of Virginia, perhaps, is better suited to truck farming, fruit raising and gardening.—Richmond Whig.
The trade of this fine section of country ought to be secured to Alexandria—by means of the Potomac river. No railroads or canals are wanted to bring it here.

THE BAND OF ORION.—"Canst thou loose the bands of Orion?"—Jon.

The three bright stars which constitute the girdle or band of Orion never change their form; they preserve the same relative position to each other and to the rest of the constellations from year to year and from age to age.
They present precisely the same appearance to us which they did to Job. No sooner does the constellation arise above the horizon, however long may have been the interval since we last beheld it, than these three stars appear in the old familiar position. They afford us one of the highest types of immutability in the midst of ceaseless changes. When heart sick and weary of the continual alterations we observe in this world, on whose most enduring objects and affections is written the melancholy doom, "Passing away," it is comforting to look up to that bright beacon in the heavens, that remains unmoved amid all the restless surges of time's great ocean. And yet, in the prolonged rest of these stars there is a ceaseless motion; in their apparent stability and everlasting endurance there is a constant change. In vast courses, with inconceivable velocity, they are whirling round invisible centres, and even passing into new constellations. They appear to us motionless and changeless, because of our great distance from them, just as the seeming motion of a train rushing down the hillsides with the speed of an arrow, and in the wild and most fragrant countryside, filling all the air with its ceaseless shouts, appears from an opposite hill frozen by the distance into silence and rest—a motionless, changeless glazer on the mountain side.

A CLERGYMAN'S JOKE.—A clergyman rather addicted to practical joking was once dining at a country inn. It was his custom to carry with him on his journeys a small phial of pungent cayenne; and at the dinner one of the party asked him for "a pinch or two of his red salt."
It was imparted without a word of caution.— The potent pepper was not long in making the poor fellow's acquaintance. His face soon became scarlet; the tonsils of his throat began to swell; his eyes began to fill with tears; and he rose in an agony of distress and "roared like the great brindle bull at his own cattle yard at home." He caught at the parson's suggestion, "water," and almost drained a stone jug which stood upon a side table, just replenished with cold spring water. As soon as he could speak, he said to his rural neighbor:
"Jedediah, for the lord's sake, does my mouth blaze?"
"No, Hiram, it don't, but it smokes, I tell you."

The fiery victim of the clerical joke strode in front of the parson, with "indignation in his aspect," and said:
"Do you know, mister, that I took you for a parson?"
"I am, indeed, a humble member of the cloth," was the reply.
"Oh! you be, you? And do you think it anyhow consistent with your calling to travel about the country in this way, carrying hell fire in your treacherous pocket?"
